mindsphere provides a common platform that integrates all data and information flow in one software-defined environment for industrial iot applications. applications such as physical or virtual sensors can be connected to other devices and to backend applications. the design philosophy is: disconnected to the internet, connected to the network. m2m (machine-to-machine) and iiot (industrial iot) applications have been in existence for some time. the challenge is in getting the data out of the devices that generate it, and into the systems that need to collect and analyze it. in addition, most applications today are not connected to the wider internet, but remain independent, isolated islands of data. while this type of connectivity is important for data streaming and telemetry, it makes analyzing and acting on the information difficult, because the data is silo ed. it is connected to the network, but it is still disconnected to everything else. on the european level, the european bon project (business ontology networks) aims at designing and deploying an interoperable infrastructure for ontological discovery and semantic integration of business information. mindsphere is one of the cornerstones of this effort. mindsphere provides a data structure and an associated semantics that can be used by business applications and services. such a business ontology enables them to communicate with each other, and to deliver a better customer experience. in the smart factory paradigm, all manufacturing processes are monitored through software and hardware running on a network of computer systems. data collected in real-time help predict in near real-time which production line is producing the best quality and which machines or process steps need adjustment. real-time data on product quality and machine wear allows smart factory systems to make production process changes in real time before they cause a significant quality or cost problem. 5ec8ef588b
